Anatomy of a Mantle

A detailed diagram of a fireplace mantle assembly. The diagram shows a central fireplace opening with a black frame and a firebox containing logs. Above the opening is a large, light-colored stone or tile surround. The mantle is composed of several parts: a Crown at the top, an Overmantel above the Crown, a Mantel Shelf below the Overmantel, a Header above the fireplace opening, and two Legs on either side of the opening. The Internal Surround is the area between the Header and the fireplace opening. The Firebox is the central opening where the fire burns. The Hearth is the base of the fireplace, extending out into the room. Red lines with dots point to each of these parts, and text boxes provide definitions for each.

Crown

The uppermost part of a fireplace, usually with decorative edging.
(The Crown is part of the over mantel kit.)

Overmantel

A vertical slab of tiled masonry directly above the mantel shelf.

Mantel Shelf

A flat horizontal slab jutting from the wall for displaying art pieces.
(The Mantel Shelf is part of the surround.)

Header

The area below the mantel shelf, usually with delicate carving on it.
(The Header is part of the surround.)

Leg

One of the two vertical columns on either side of a fireplace.
(The Leg is part of the surround.)

Internal Surround

Beautifully tiled to compliment your fireplace surround.

Firebox

(Fireplace insert sold separately.)

Hearth

The bottom portion of a fireplace that extends out into the room.
